

Please do not let banks weaken the no-call laws in Indiana. The residents of our state have spoken very clearly and in very large numbers that our telephones and service have been purchased by us, for our convenience and personal use. We do not own them for the convenience of telemarketers and do not appreciate all the unsolicited calls during our personal evening hours. Before the no-call list, one evening I personally received 12 telemarketing calls! It had gotten completely out of control!!

Just because I bank, and in this day and age having a bank account is a necessity, I don't want to be forced to receive unwanted and unsolicited phone calls from their telemarketers at all hours.

Structuring some type of marketing plan whereby people who desire these calls may opt-in by signing a form would be acceptable. Just don't make it a plan in which I have to do anything in order to avoid the nuisance calls. Thank you for your time.
